Comment : I was deeply offended by the comments made by Pat Robertson on the air recently. Furthermore, I feel that if he is allowed to make comments that another human being, albeit not an America citizen but that is irrelevannt, be killed is a violation of FCC rule and should be punishable. In addition, if you consider the videos presented on Al Jezeera showing killers threatening to kill other human lives to be barbaric then how ar the comments of Robertson any different?

If the FCC allows what Pat Robertson did to go without punishment, then you are all a bunch of damn hypocrits. The United States of America is a system based on non-predudicial justice. Justice is not meant for some while excluding others due to social status, economic status, or religious status. Judicial punification is intended for ALL parties regardless of any demographic or economic status. Therefore, a simple "oh, he's a minister and therefore excused" would be the answer I would expect but it is NOT the answer that is the American way nor is it the answer that adheres to regulations and the impletation thereof.

Regardless of the fact that this man has run for office, owns his own network, and probably has many friends in Washington. He deserves the same punishment as anyone else who is violated the regulations of the FCC. If proclaiming a need to killi someone is not a violation of FCC regulation or it is protected under Freedom of Speech, then al I can say is Lord have mercy on our sad Nation.
